University of Mississippi
this volume is affectionately dedicated

L. Q. C. LAMAR
EDUCATOR, LEGISLATOR, JURIST

L. Q. C. Lamar, Professor

MR. LAMAR'S connection with the University of Mississippi began in 1850. At that time he was a practicing attorney in the town of Oxford, and in July of that year he was elected as Adjunct Professor of Mathematics. He held this position for two years, resigning in 1852, and returned to Georgia. Later he came back to Mississippi, resumed the practice of his profession, and in 1860 he was a member of Congress from the First District. Tiring of public life and the fruitless efforts of Southern Democrats to avert the "inevitable conflict," when in June, 1860, he was offered the chair of Ethics and Metaphysics in the University, he accepted it and took up its duties on the opening of the session of 1860-61. In May, 1861, having been elected Lieutenant-Colonel of the Nineteenth Mississippi Regiment, he resigned his professorship for army life in Virginia. In June, 1866, Colonel Lamar was again elected to the chair of Ethics and Metaphysics. He accepted. Owing to the scarcity of funds and the dearth of instructors, he did more than double duty, conducting classes in Psychology, Logic, and in Law. In January, 1867, he was relieved of his work in the College Department and was placed at the head of the Law School. In this school he served until June, 1870, when, owing to the condition of State affairs, he voluntarily resigned. This severed his final connection with the University.

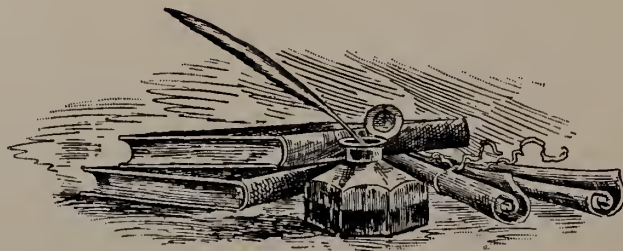

Of him ex-Chancellor Mayes has said:

"There was but one voice from those who came in contact with him, in regard to Professor Lamar's efficiency. He was an enthusiast in his calling, whatever that might be; and that enthusiasm he carried into his professional work. As a member of the Faculty he was always wise and prompt in counsel, temperate and considerate, although firm where occasion arose. To his pupils he was always accessible and kind, companionable, inspiring them all with commingled sentiments of profound respect and personal regard. He was devoted to their interests. He felt that, for the time, he was the representative of the true principles of the science which he taught, and that he was individually responsible for the results of his teaching. He possessed in a wonderful degree the faculty of infusing his own spirit into all who sat under his instruction. It was his lot to fill three of the least attractive chairs in the University—Mathematics, Metaphysics, and Law. Yet to each of them he gave a charm in the eyes of his pupils, alike unusual and beneficial. Many of those pupils treasured up his instructions, and bore away with them rich fruits of their association with him; and, in the professional eminence which they attained, proved themselves successful channels for the communication of the same benefits to others."

During the seven years he was connected with the University his influence upon the youth of the State was wide and lasting. Of this, speaking for himself, Bishop Galloway has written: "He was the Gamaliel at whose feet I sat and from whose lips I received instruction. The thrill of that flashing eye, the tone of that magic voice, the strange magnetism of that magnificent presence, filling as it did the broad heaven of our imaginations and the loftiest ideal of my young ambition, have lingered and inspired me for more than half a jubilee of years."

Hon. C. E. Hooker, in a memorial address, spoke these words: "The love and affection which he aroused in the hearts of young men was wonderful. I know of no criticism to which a professor can be subjected more to be dreaded than that of young men assembled from all portions of the State in the classes of a university. You will not find a graduate of that institution who was educated there during the period that Mr. Lamar acted as professor that does not feel for him and has not borne for him in all the changing stages of life that perfect affection and profound admiration that he inspired in the hearts of all young men who came in contact with him."

The Morning Glory

BY WALTER MALONE

Morning glory, morning glory,
Fragile as a fairy story,
Robed in gowns of purple and of white and red,
Diademed with dew,
There are none so fair as you,
Empress of the world of blossoms ere the youth of day is dead.

Lovely handmaid of the morning,
Lowly earthly scenes adorning,
An enchantress who is peerless and is proud,
Decked in brilliant blooms
Like the silks of Tyrian looms,
Or the oriental splendors of a spangled sunrise cloud.

So I ponder and remember
In a green and gold September,
I have seen a maiden fair and frail as you;
But she drooped and died,
As you perish in your pride,
For the blithest and the brightest vanish with the morning dew.

Morning glory, morning glory,
From her tombstone old and hoary
Do your dying blossoms go to meet her there?
There in marvelous morn,
Plucking roses with no thorn,
In the empire of the angels, does she heed my heart's despair?

But amid the noonday splendor
Fade away your bosoms tender,
As the dewdrops vanish from your feverish face,
So you pant and pine
Ere the dazzling day's decline,
Losing all your glow of color and your gladness and grace.

So I bless you now, and kiss you;
Tell her, Darling, how I miss you!
In heaven you are treading, sweet, to-day,
Does your bosom thrill
When you hear I love you still,
And are you still faithful, sweetheart, to your lover, far away?"

Historical Sketch

THE 6th of November, 1898, will be the fiftieth anniversary of the opening of the University of Mississippi, and it is but fitting that some word or memorial commemorative of that event should appear in this volume of OLE MISS. The readers are, therefore, invited to the consideration of a brief sketch of the history of the institution, in the earnest hope that anything tending toward a better knowledge and appreciation of the benefits the University has conferred upon the State may be accompanied by an increasing loyalty and enthusiasm on the part of its alumni.

When Mississippi was admitted to statehood, Congress set aside one township of the public lands for the establishment of an institution of higher education within its borders. Out of the proceeds of the sale of this land the State University was founded. The management of the funds received from the sale of the original grant from Congress was vested in the Legislature of the State. The Act of the Legislature of March 5, 1880, provides for the ascertainment of the indebtedness of the State on account of the Seminary Fund, and "that the sum of $32,643 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated for the year 1880, and annually thereafter, for the purpose of paying the interest due on said sum of $544,061.23."

The Legislature has, in addition to this fixed income, from time to time made special appropriations to the University; and within recent years the Board of Trustees has, through the earnest efforts of Chancellor R. B. Fulton, been successful in securing from Congress the grant of another township of land. In view of which facts, and the friendly attitude of the Legislature, the way seems clear for the continued and ever-increasing prosperity of the institution.

The University has been peculiarly fortunate in having had its affairs managed by faculties composed of many eminent professors, and in having been presided over by distinguished Presidents and Chancellors. It is impossible, in this short article, to give mention of all who did noble service for the State as professors in the University; the best that can be done is to acknowledge the debt of gratitude we owe, and to express the pride we feel in having had connected with the institution such men as were Justice Lamar, Professors Bledsoe, Wheat, Quinche, Sears, Garland, Hillgard, Hogue, and others also deserving of mention. Fortunately, those who have been at the head of the institution are not so many that they may not be named. In the order of their terms of office they are as follows: Dr. George Frederick Holmes, Judge A. B. Longstreet, Dr. Frederick A. P. Barnard, Dr. John Newton Waddel, Gen. Alexander P. Stewart, Hon. Edward Mayes, and Dr. Robert Burwell Fulton, all of whom are well and favorably known beyond the limits of any one State. The influence of these men and their colleagues has resulted in the substantial progress of the University from its very beginning, and has been potent in moulding the destiny of our State through those of its sons who were educated under their instruction. It is a noteworthy fact that a very large proportion of the men of the State who have power and influence in their several communities have been educated, in part at least, at the State University; while many of its alumni have achieved prominence in other States. The enduring history of institutions, as well as of nations, is largely in the life and character of the individuals they have given to the world; and measured by such a principle, in view of the magnificent work of its noble-hearted instructors and presiding officers in furnishing to Mississippi and the nation such distinguished alumni as have graduated from its halls, the University of Mississippi has set in motion immortal influences and wrought for eternity in the souls of men.

In the lives of the men who have been intimately connected with the institution for the last half-century, whether as instructors or students, there is the highest inspiration for every young man who may in the future seek here preparation for his life-work; and we that are to follow can pay no greater tribute to the worth of our predecessors than by emulating their lives and striving to attain the same exalted patriotism that shall result in the development of broad-minded and cosmopolitan characters.

Our Alma Mater

OUR ALMA MATER, or in words of English tongue,
Our dear mother, O most dear!
Would that words were given to praise thee,
Would that pure love might furnish Words sufficient. Oh, what a song divine
Should we then sing! If only our Full hearts could utter what they feel!
If lips could phrase our deep devotion!
By sweetest memories art thou hallowed;
By cherished blessings made most dear.
Thy sons in one glad chorus join
To give thee thanks, and still we feel
That ever shall we debtors be to thy
Sublime munificence. The classic lore
Of ages past, the secrets of mysterious science,
The golden wealth of wisdom hoarded
In volumes vast of erudition,—
All these hast thou with unwearied love
Striven to bestow on us, sometimes too dull
To garner thy most precious sheaves,
Too dull to see where greatest blessings lie,
And so have robbed thee of thy purest joy,
The joy that givers get from gifts
Received with joy.

(Selected.)

"O college days that speed on wings so strong,
O college joys that last not long, not long,
O college friends from whom we soon shall sever,
O college friendships made for aye and ever."

"Lo! at the midnight hour
Gleams a light from Fraternity's high watchtower!
Far away unto sunrise and sunset sea,
Bearing hope, love, and faith to humanity."

"Fraternity, it is not that each heart
Must gifted be with talents choice and rare;
It is enough to have that nobler part;
What though one's genius proveth small and spare,
So faith and love be there?
'Tis not the handsome face or easy wealth,
These things touch but the grosser side of men;
'Tis more, 'tis loyalty, the heart, true health,
To hear an arduous duty-call, and then
To breathe, Amen."

Fraternities in the University of Mississippi

THE fraternity system was introduced into the University of Mississippi in the first year of its operation, and throughout its entire history such organizations have flourished in the institution.

In 1848 the Rainbow, or W. W. W., Fraternity was founded at this University; and, upon the consolidation of the two fraternities in 1886, became Chapter Pi of Delta Tau Delta. The Rainbow Division of Delta Tau Delta will, at its next annual conference, to be held in Oxford, Mississippi, celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of the founding of the Rainbow Fraternity. Among the prominent alumni of this Rainbow Delta Tau Delta Chapter are: Hon. H. L. Muldrow, Hon. A. A. Kincannon, Judge J. C. Longstreet, Hon. J. S. Sexton, and Hon. B. G. Humphreys.

Chi Chapter of Delta Kappa Epsilon has flourished in the University of Mississippi since the year 1855, and it is rumored that within a year or so a Delta Kappa Epsilon chapter-house will be erected on the college campus. Among the distinguished graduates of the institution who were members of this chapter of the fraternity are: Judge A. H. Whitfield, of the Mississippi Supreme Bench; Hon. Edward Mayes, Dr. Jerry Witherspoon, Judge Eugene Johnson; and Judge E. E. Bryant, of Arkansas.

Delta Psi founded its Phi Chapter here in 1855, and is now the only fraternity on the campus that owns a chapter-house. The building is quite a pretty brick structure, a cut of which appears on another page of this volume of "OLE MISS." Among the distinguished sons of Phi of Delta Psi may be named: Senator H. D. Money; Congressmen T. C. Catchings and W. V. Sullivan; Judge L. B. Valiant, of St. Louis; and Judge S. H. Terral, of the Mississippi Supreme Court.

Mississippi Alpha of Phi Kappa Psi was established in 1857. The chapter was not reorganized after the war until 1881, since which time it has enjoyed an uninterrupted existence. Among those of its alumni more worthy of mention are: Lieutenant-Governor W. J. Manning, of Arkansas; Judge W. F. Stevens, Hon. W. P. Tackette, Dr. J. R. Tackette, and Dr. S. S. Carter.

In the same year, 1857, Sigma Chi planted in the University of Mississippi its Eta Chapter, which was one of the two Southern chapters of the fraternity to be reorganized after the war. The chapter counts among its prominent alumni: Hon. Wm. R. Meyers, formerly Secretary of State of Mississippi; Hon. Wiley P. Nash, Attorney-General of the State; Hons. W. A. Roane, Thomas H. Spight, and J. R. McIntosh, well known at the bar of Mississippi.

Mississippi Gamma of Sigma Alpha Epsilon was established in 1866. It has, from time to time, received very valuable transfers from the strong chapter of the fraternity at the Agricultural and Mechanical College of Mississippi. Among the distinguished sons of Mississippi Gamma are: Judge C. B. Howry, of the Court of Claims; Congressman Patrick Henry; and Attorneys C. B. Ames, George M. Mitchell, and W. E. Utterback.

Mississippi Alpha of Phi Delta Theta began its career in the University of Mississippi in 1877; and, since that time, with the exception of Delta Tau Delta, which united with the already existing Rainbow, and Beta Theta Pi, which absorbed the Mystical Seven, no fraternity has planted an entirely new chapter in this institution. Though the Phi Delta Theta generation in Mississippi is comparatively young, among its more prominent alumni may be named: Hon. Monroe McClurg, Hon. L. M. Southworth; Attorney Firman Smith, of Nashville; Hon. Shed Hill; and Hon. W. A. McDonald, of the Oxford (Mississippi) bar.

The Sophomore fraternity, Theta Nu Epsilon, was organized in the spring of 1895, and this session has seen the establishment of the ultra-secret honorary fraternity, "The V."

Two sororities, Sigma Tau and Tau Delta Theta, made their appearance in the year 1896. As yet they are both strictly local. Each has its colors, its flower, and a jeweled badge, and enjoys the esteem and hearty goodwill of our entire Greek community.

The Mystic Seven, Beta Theta Pi, Phi Gamma Delta, Chi Psi, Phi Kappa Sigma, and the two sororities, Alpha Beta Tau and Delta Gamma, have from time to time had flourishing chapters in the University of Mississippi; but all are now inactive. The University of Mississippi has been the birthplace of one fraternity and three sororities, and the very best general fraternities have been glad to maintain chapters in the institution.

The local conditions have had a tendency to intensify fraternity life in the University of Mississippi, and there is a very high degree of spirit manifest in all the existing chapters. Rivalry sometimes breaks the bounds of friendly emulation; but, notwithstanding occasional serious misunderstandings, the inherent Southern chivalry of the student body asserts itself in a most gentlemanly bearing on the part of all who wear a badge toward their rivals and the non-fraternity men. All the more thoughtful and broadminded students sincerely trust that the fraternities here will not fail to foster an honest and manly rivalry that scorns the littleness of soul that would cherish unfriendly feeling or refuse to do honor to substantial merit wherever found.

Shakespearean Letter

I do beseech your grace let this letter be read (Love's Labor Lost)

OXFORD, MISSISSIPPI, APRIL THE SECOND, 1898.

GENTLE FRIENDS (Julius Cæsar)—GREETINGS AND SALUTATIONS TO YOU ALL (As You Like It):

I do desire with all my heart (As You Like It) to do observance (Midsummer Night's Dream) to an April day (Timon of Athens). In a wood a league without the town, where wheat is green, where hawthorne buds appear, is a marvelous convenient place for our (Midsummer Night's Dream) (Shakespeare's Fete Champetre). I do beseech you then (Merchant of Venice), by this post that comes from valiant Oxford (Henry VI); put you in your best array (As You Like It), choose your own company (Antony and Cleopatra), (and when) the worshipped sun peers forth the golden window of the east, and begins to draw the shady curtain from Aurora's bed (Romeo and Juliet), (while yet) the dew stands in the pretty floweret's eye (Midsummer Night's Dream) join you with me to celebrate this feast (Richard II). Be not afeard (Tempest) that we may have the uncertain glory of an April day, which now shows all the beauty of the sun, and, by and by, a cloud takes all away (Two Gentlemen of Verona); (nor) envious sneaking frost that bites the first-born infants of the spring (Love's Labor Lost), (and) falls in the fresh lap of the crimson rose (Midsummer Night's Dream); (instead may come) the sweet south that breathes upon a bank of violets, stealing and giving odor (Twelfth Night).

Wilt go with me? I will show you banks with peonied and liliated brims (Tempest); (where) winking Mary-buds begin to ope their golden eyes (Cymbeline); beds of sweet musk roses, lush woodbine and eglantine (Midsummer Night's Dream), (and in Shakespeare's Garden of Girls) a chaplet of sweet summer buds (Midsummer Night's Dream); carnations, hot lavender, streaked gilly flowers, and the marigold, that goes to bed with the sun, and with him rises weeping (Winter's Tale); daffodils that come before the swallow dares, and take the winds of March with beauty; violets dim, but sweeter than the lids of Juno's eyes, or Cythera's breath; pale primroses, that die unmarried, ere they can behold bright Phœbus in his strength; bold ox-lips and the crown imperial; lilies of all kinds, the flower-de-luce being one (Winter's Tale); (Iris) the many-color'd messenger with her saffron wings (Tempest); rosemary and rue (Winter's Tale); daisies pied and lady-smocks all silver—white (Love's Labor Lost) (and) flower of this purple dye, hit with Cupid's archery (Midsummer Night's Dream).

In the forest here (As You Like It) exempt from public haunt (As You Like It) where the current makes sweet music with enameled stones (Two Gentlemen of Verona), we will find tongues in trees, books in the running brooks, sermons in stones, and good in everything (As You Like It). As merry as crickets shall we be (Henry IV), under the greenwood tree (As You Like It), and we will share a bounteous time in different pleasures (Timon of Athens). I will tell you of what kind if you will give me hearing; wit shall not go slipshod (King Lear); mirth shall crack the lawyer's voice (Timon of Athens); we'll make a lip at the physician (Coriolanus) and after some orations fairly spoke (Merchant of Venice) (few in millions can speak like us) (Tempest). There'll be music with her silver sound. Why silver sound? Marry, because silver hath a sweet sound and musicians sound for silver (Romeo and Juliet). There's one excels the quirks of blazoning pens (Othello), she will tune her merry note unto the sweet birds' throat (As You Like It), (and) sing the song that pleaseth you (Henry IV); two alone will sing (Lear), will with sweet melody sing (Midsummer Night's Dream) (of the) bank whereon the wild thyme blows, where ox-lips and the nodding violet grows (Midsummer Night's Dream).

What's more, we will perform (Macbeth) an excellent play, well digested in the scenes (Hamlet—As You Like It). The green plot shall be our stage, the hawthorne-brake our tiring-house (Midsummer Night's Dream). They who play it are the men who work in (Midsummer Night's Dream) the studious University (Two Gentlemen of Verona) in this Athens (of the South) here (Midsummer Night's Dream); the best actors in the world, either for tragedy, comedy, pastoral, pastoral-comical, historical-pastoral, tragical-historical, tragical-comical-historical-pastoral, scene-individable, or poem unlimited; Seneca can not be too heavy, nor Plautus too light. For the law of writ and the liberty, these are the only men. O Jephtha, Judge of Israel, what a treasure (Hamlet) (have I).

In the afternoon (Love's Labor Lost), while the west yet glimmers with some streaks of day (Macbeth), we will with some pastime solace them, such as the shortness of the time can shape, in revels, dances, merry hours (Love's Labor Lost).

The stars, the stars above us, govern our conditions (Lear), and when the unfolding star, calls up the shepherd (Measure for Measure), and will kiss the valleys first (Winter's Tale) (ere) the blessed moon tips with silver all the fruit-tree tops (Romeo and Juliet), homeward will we bend our course (Comedy of Errors).

He that outlives this day and comes safe home
Will stand a tip-toe when the day is named;
Old men forget; yet all shall be forgot;
But he'll remember with advantages
What feats he did that day (Henry IV).

I pray you, then, remember (Hamlet) (April the twenty-third) in brave Oxford, wondrous, well beloved, in Oxfordshire, to muster up thy friends (Henry IV) and our celebration keep according to (Shakespeare's) birth (Twelfth Night); at the hour of nine this carol they begin:

It was a lover and his lass
With a hy, and a ho, and a hey nonino,
That thro' the green fields did pass,
In the springtime, the only pretty ring time,
With a hy, and a ho, and a hey nonino (As You Like It).

This letter is too long by half a mile (Love's Labor Lost); 'tis like a tangled chain, nothing impaired, but all disordered (Midsummer Night's Dream); yet one word more (Richard III). Let me entreat you (Henry IV), play the scribe (Titus Andronicus). You are full of pretty answers (As You Like It), you shall not say me nay (Love's Labor Lost). I am so full of businesses I can not answer thee acutely (All's Well). Let it be written in eight and six—no, make it two lines more; eight and eight (Midsummer Night's Dream); an answer of most monstrous size that will fit all demands (All's Well). Study day and night to answer (Henry IV) (in)

Will Shakespeare's Words.

Farewell—God's benison go with you (Macbeth).
Thine evermore (Hamlet).

Department of Elocution, Oratory, Shakespeare, and Debate

THE authorities of the University years ago, appreciating the necessity of a thorough training in voice and expression, established as a separate department, the chair of Elocution. This department has been progressive along all lines. To-day it has developed into more than a department of elocution simply; it is a department of oratory in its best sense. The course is well graded and extends through a period of two years. Every effort is made to maintain a high standard, and to make still further advances each succeeding year. A thorough study of the great orators, of the great debaters, their orations, their debates, and a literary and vocal interpretation of the Bible, Milton, and Shakespeare is the work of the second year. The great English master is studied thoroughly and well. Each year at least one of his great plays is presented to the public by the amateurs of this department. During 1897 the class presented on a great lawn "As You Like It." This year "A Midsummer Night's Dream" will be presented on the college green. "The accurate reproduction of a Shakespearian play on the historical Shakespearian stage will go far towards giving a college audience a definite understanding of the play itself, as well as contributing to their appreciation of its purely dramatic qualities." Debates are interesting, and timely questions are annually discussed by members of the class. The question discussed this year was: "Resolved, That Julius Cæsar was the greatest man that ever figured in the tide of time." This department has kept alive in the University the spirit of oratory. Nine-tenths of the medals won in contests here and elsewhere in which the University is interested have been won by students of this department. The most brilliant young orators of the State have studied and gained their inspiration for wider efforts in this school.

The present high standard of this department is due to the instructor, Miss Sarah McGehee Isom. Miss Isom was graduated from the Boston School of Oratory. She has studied with many of the foremost teachers of America, among the number the eminent reader and lecturer, James E. Murdock, "The Nestor of the American Stage." She has visited Europe, and sought there the foremost teachers of London and other educational centers. She keeps in touch with the most advanced principles of her art. It was the Hon. John Temple Graves who said: "This department in the University of Mississippi is far in advance of any similar department in Southern colleges and universities." Such success "reveals a richness and versatility of womanhood which must stand not only as an argument but as a prophecy of what higher education can do."

Long Ago

The Grad sat deep in meditation,
Wondering what in—botheration—
Gave his latest fond flirtation
Such a sudden termination.

Or was it but predestination
That this great humiliation
Should decrease the large inflation
Just preceding graduation?

Could it be dissemination
Of some wicked defamation
Of his blameless reputation
By some imp of hell's creation?

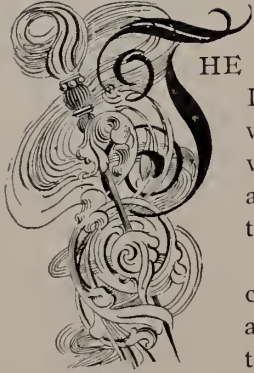

He wrapped himself in cogitation,
And at last the explanation
Came flashing through his desperation—
He was too slow in osculation!

L'Envoi

Since then the perfect adaptation
Of our Grads to sweet flirtation
Has filled with joy and admiration
The female hearts of all the nation.

The Dead House

THE Dead House looks out from a shady growth of forest trees upon the tennis courts and athletic field. It seems to cherish the secrets of its mysterious halls, and a sight of its dark interior is gained only with great difficulty from without. The walls hold many niches that resemble windows, but red brick where the sash should be mock the eyes of observers. What windows exist are small and murky, affording hardly a glimpse of the interior. Students, in their aimless strolls on idle afternoons, shun the vicinity of this lonely house.

It is only natural that an unattractive little building, alone in the woods, with no human interest centered in it, should be left unnoticed by the passing world; that its name should seldom be spoken among men. But why should one in traversing the University grounds on an errand of business, seeing that his course is leading near the mossy walls of the Dead House, turn suddenly, with a nervous clenching of the hands, and pass far around it? Why should the never-silent student lower his voice and speak in the fewest words when incidentally the Dead House is mentioned?

During the civil war, the University Chapel was converted into a Confederate hospital. The dead, in the interval before burial, were removed from time to time to the little storehouse of electrical apparatus out in the woods, and the rigid sleep of the unfortunates who lay within those silent walls has left its memory among men undiminished by the flight of years. The thought of death comes involuntarily when one gazes upon that forsaken morgue; yet how little is known of the horrors that dwell within it! Death holds his court within that dreary place; intangible ghosts minister to his whims, stalking about the throne in ghastly grave-clothes, the red wounds of war gleaming angry upon their blanched and shrunken forms.

Each day as twilight deepens, the spirits, emboldened by the welcome approach of darkness, assemble in the Chamber of the Throne. The king takes his seat, his grim, forbidding countenance almost softened into smiling, the dry, blue lips retreating from the yellow fangs, and his pale eyes glinting like emeralds.

Dim blue lights appear at a sign from the throne, and the weird rites of evening are performed amid wailing incantations, the shadowy votaries moving to and fro, and marching in solemn state, preceded and followed by the lights around the king's chair. After the dismal ceremony is concluded, a window is opened by unseen hands and the procession glides out, led by the king. The green vine that brushes the window does not rustle as the ghastly forms glide through its branches, and the tall grass shows no sign of their footprints at the return of dawn.

When the spectral line is lost to sight, the window closes softly, and through the long hours of night the stillness of death hovers over the house. Not a sound, not a whisper, except the timid moaning of the winds among the forest trees. Far across the level surface of the grove, the boisterous student songs and shouts gradually cease, the dormitory lights go out one by one, and everywhere night reigns; still, black, uncanny night. One solitary figure walks to and fro in the king's chamber, and his solemn tread intensifies the stillness, measuring time with unfailing regularity. The moon climbs aloft in the heavens, and its pale light filters through the vine that clings to the window, and plays in grotesque figures upon the floor. As the moon rises toward the zenith the wavering light retreats from the floor and the hall becomes dark again. Out of the distance the town clock strikes in mellow, reverberating tones. Dismally the wind moans in the treetops and whistles around the corners of the building. Steadily the guard walks. The clock bell rings, and rings again. The moon beams in at another window, and the weapons of the grim sentinel glisten in the light.

When at last the hours of darkness have worn away and a cold gleam lights sullenly in the east, at the hour appointed for return the guard sees the glinting eyes of his chief peering in upon him. The window opens noiselessly; the sleeping vine moves not; the pale procession, as cold as the morning frost, glide in and stand in rank before the throne. Oppressive silence reigns for a few moments, then out of the distance a faint voice is heard calling out names in succession, and the spirits answer, each in his turn. After the roll-call the same faint voice is heard shouting: "Open, open the gates! The king has come to his fires again! Burn! burn! within the gates, ye everlasting fires! Ye vassals, come out to receive the king!" A sound of distant rumblings, clanking of chains, creaking and slamming of gates is heard, and a sulphurous odor fills the room. The king stretches forth his hand:

"Most wretched ghosts, where in the benighted world has your baleful mission led you?"

They answer: "Most honored King of Night, thou hast led us up and down in forsaken lands, performing thy majestic will."

The king: "What, O spirits, is the eternal will of the king?"

Spirits: "That the night be made rife with tricks and apparitions; that mischief be done to all that live; that diseases and plagues be fomented while day is gone."

The hall is filled with sulphurous smoke; the mingled noises in the distance continue; cries of pain and harsh words of command arise above an indistinct murmur as of voices of an innumerable multitude muttering and cursing, clanking their chains, and stamping their feet in utter unrest.

The king arises: "It is well; your work is done; come to me when the day dies; begone."

They turn about silently; they fade from view; the throne disappears; the king is not seen. The indistinct murmur is changed to a prolonged shout of welcome. Then are heard again harsh commands and the lashing of whips; a thousand distant iron doors creak on their hinges and close with a crash, and silence falls.

And now the sun rises smiling over the hill and bends his gaze closely upon the Dead House. He kisses the cold walls coyly and caresses the waving tendrils of the vine as he peeps curiously in at the windows in a vain endeavor to behold the mysteries.

Oblivion

Naught of the wasted years
Strikes through the gloom,
Savor of bitter tears
Finds not the tomb;
Death binds about the head,
Languid and wet,
Sleepy, dull poppies red:
We shall forget.

Eyes

Blue eyes, tender eyes,
Where the imprisoned sky-born hue
Tells of a heart noble and true,
All them believe.

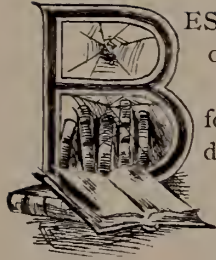

Brown eyes, loving eyes,
Glorious with light, some one to bless,
There dwells the soul of gentleness,
Sorrows' reprieve.

Grey eyes, earnest eyes,
In whose glance truth and loyalty
Unite with voiceless constancy,
They'll ne'er deceive.

Black eyes, joyous eyes,
Sparkling, night-hued, wondrous with glee,
Home of laughter and jollity,
Make some heart grieve.

The Road Between

I.

ESIDE the rude trail leading up the slope of the mountain stands a cabin surrounded by two or three acres of half-cultivated ground; everywhere are seen signs of poverty.

Not far from the cabin an old, half-starved mule wanders about; around the cabin door three or four dogs are lying in the sun. A mountaineer and his wife sit silently smoking their pipes on the doorsteps.

It is half an hour since the wife joined her husband, and yet not a word has passed between them. She knits and smokes, and raises her eyes only at intervals. He smokes and thinks, and gazes at the treetops across the road.

These mountaineers of the Cumberland are a strange people. They are morose, stoical, and silent, and always thinking and thinking. They even seem suspicious of each other. They come and go, they live, they die—but as no other class of people. They have their ways, and their ways descend from father to son.

By and by the man speaks. Without taking his pipe from his mouth or his eyes from the treetops, he says:

“Joe’s a-comin’.”

“Reckon he ar’,” replies the wife, without looking up.

A quarter of a mile down the trail is a man walking slowly and carrying a rifle on his shoulder. Neither of those on the doorsteps have yet seen him, but their quick ears have detected the sound of footsteps among the stones.

Soon he stands before them and lets the butt of his rifle fall to the ground.

“Howdy,” says the new arrival.

“Howdy,” answers the man and woman in chorus.

“Powe’ful hot.”

“Yes, powe’ful.”

No more is said until Joe fills and lights his pipe and takes his seat on a near-by stump. Then the woman, her eyes on the ground, asks:

“Reckon him orter do it, Joe?”

“Of cose him orter,” replies Joe.

“Yes, for shore,” adds the husband.

“It’ll be the ole man?” says the woman, after a short pause.

"The old man, for shore," replies Joe.

The wife grows pale and her fingers tremble as she plies her needles; there is something like anxiety in her tones, when, after a pause of several minutes, she says: "I wish Jim wouldn't do it. I don't like this killin'."

"Hev to kill," answered Joe, laconically.

"Yes, hev to kill," adds Jim, as he arises and yawns and stretches his limbs.

Joe holds out his rifle to him and he takes it and examines its several parts, and nods his head with satisfaction.

"You can drop him at forty yards," says Joe, as he pushes away the dogs which had arisen and were licking his hand.

"From thirty-five to forty," answered the other, as he brings the weapon to his shoulder and sights along the barrel.

"Got to make shore work," says Jim; "come fur it to-morrer."

"Reckon I will; day to yo'all."

When the caller had gone his way the husband sits down, refills his pipe, and makes another examination of the rifle. A long silence is broken by the wife's query: "What's the trouble, Jim?"

"Same as befo'."

"Ole man Taylor and our two hogs?"

"Yes, he wants damages and I won't pay."

"Gwine to kill him?"

"Fur shore."

"Wish yo' wouldn't."

"Got ter."

That ends the conversation. When he had exhausted his pipe he knocks the ashes out and enters the cabin. He goes to the cupboard and helps himself to a drink of whisky. When he reappears at the door he stands for a moment looking about.

"Gwine now?" queries the wife.

"Yes, gwine now."

He starts up the trail, while the woman never takes her eyes from her work.

II.

Two miles up the trail is Taylor's cabin. It is the same sort of hovel, with the same poor acres grown up in weeds, and with the same signs of poverty without and poverty within.

A woman sits smoking on the doorsteps, too, but she is alone. Her husband has gone down the trail with his rifle on his shoulder.

"Gwine ter kill Jim Green?" she asked, as he was leaving.

"Reckon so," he replied, as he moved away.

Two cabins, two wives on the doorsteps, two men with rifles on the trail between. At such a height above the sea-level sound travels a long distance. Both women hear the crack of a rifle by-and-by. After an hour or two Taylor returns home. When he had lighted a pipe and taken a seat beside his wife, she asks: Did yo' leave him down thar?"

"Yes, I left him down thar," replies he.

Two or three hours later a man stops before the other cabin and says to the woman smoking her pipe on the doorsteps: "Jim's been shot."

"Up thar?" she asks, pointing up the trail.

"Yes, up thar."

"Lyin' dead?"

"Yes, lyin' dead. Good evenin'."

"Evenin' to yo'."

History of Senior Class

NCE again, and for the last time, it becomes the duty of the Historian of the '98 Class to chronicle a few facts and observations concerning this, in many respects, wonderful class. When this short account reaches our friends and fellow students we shall have completed our college course, and shall be in a position to appreciate more fully than ever the real import of that familiar word, "Commencement." We do not deem this the proper time or place to indulge in any criticisms of the other classes with which we have been so pleasantly associated, nor can we honestly indorse that intense spirit of rivalry that so thoroughly pervades most of our colleges and universities, as manifested in their class histories, and that leads to copious expressions of self-gratulation on the one side, and of contempt and derision on the other. Hence we shall confine the observations here made to those things that relate distinctively to the Senior Class.

There are many things that impress us in taking a retrospect of the time elapsed since we first assembled as Freshmen. Some occasions we associate with joyful states of mind, others with painful states, according as such occurrences remind us of victories won or lost. We do not contend that we are an ideal class; yet, in justice to ourselves and to our friends, we feel constrained simply to enumerate a few lines of activity in which we have been prominent. There is no need for specific facts and illustrations. Neither the time, the place, nor propriety demands it.

In athletics we are easily in the lead. For two years '98 has held the championship in football; and this session our latent power in baseball needs only an opportunity for manifestation. In scholarship we are decidedly above the average. If any one wishes to contest this statement, let him refer to our record. Oratorical talent we possess, but would prefer not to stake the reputation of the class solely upon this accomplishment. Surely all the organizations of the University will suffer a serious loss by the withdrawal of '98 men from their ranks. Especially will this be true in the literary societies and in the Y. M. C. A. The '98 Class is the largest ever graduated from the University of Mississippi; and the career and success of each individual graduate will in subsequent days be earnestly watched by sympathetic friends.

While in college we have labored earnestly and faithfully, and we have reason to believe that the majority have been impelled and influenced by a sense of duty. Soon we enter into the practical affairs of life, and the strength of the foundation laid here in college will be determined by our real success in subsequent years. And now to our friends and to our Alma Mater, to whom we would express gratitude for her fostering care, we say farewell!

Junior Class History

AND it came to pass in the year of '95, in the reign of Fulton, the Tree Planter, who ruleth to this day, that there arose in the land of Mississippi and in divers countries around about a mighty company of youths; and they girded up their loins and came together unto the University of Mississippi, which is over against Oxford. And they came exulting in their strength, and entered into that institution as the Class of '99, saying to those who dwelt within the place: "Behold, we have come to take charge." And there was wonder throughout the campus; and the Chancellor arose and looked upon them, and said unto his brethren, the Faculty, which are all exceeding wise and valiant men: "Lo, it were better not to gaze upon these youths with unprotected eyes, but rather to contemplate them through asbestos, for they are warm." After this sort spake he unto them, and they hearkened unto his words. Nor did the Faculty, on account of the temperature of the class, banish them from the University; for, "Verily," said they, "it were better to risk singeing our eyebrows and whiskers than for this institution, which we love in our hearts, to lose such a chosen band."

So, through this, the first year of their sojourn in the University, the Class of '99 kept unto themselves an even and a winning gait, striving to live peaceably with all men who would meekly give up unto them the honors, and gracefully annihilating any stiff-necked tribes which foolishly rose up against them to dispute with them.

Now when the year was done, Commencement came, and the warriors and maidens of '99 parted from one another with sorrow in their hearts, and went each to his own home to spend vacation in his father's house. So summer came, and passed by like a scorcher that scorches and tarries not, and the days of autumn drew near. And when the ninth month was come, the Class of '99 arose and passed over to the University again; and when they had assembled in council they said among themselves: "Behold, we will run the school again." Then out of their warriors they chose a leader, a strong man and just, and likewise chose they Secretary, Treasurer, athletic officers, and Historian, as was done by all Sophomores aforetime.

The days and the weeks bestirred themselves and passed by, and the football season came; and '99 arose and went out to fight against '98, a barbarous tribe, that know not the rules of Spalding nor fear to transgress his laws. Now it happened that upon that day the warriors of '99 were not feeling very well, neither did they half try; so it came to pass that they were beaten just a little. Then again met '99 in council, and their looks were dark, and they said in impatient tones: "The Rubes have beaten us." Then arose among them many words and much gesticulating, and it is not known but that they had girded themselves about and marched from that hall as one man and wiped '98 off of the earth, had not one arisen among them with soothing words and said unto them: "Sophomores, ye are not children. The unknown tribe have beaten you a little; let it pass. Ye did not half try; for, verily, if ye had, there had been not one of '98 left to boast of his scars. So, rest ye easy; for the day of retribution will surely come with the springtime."

So spake the seer, and his words were true; for in the spring of '97 the classes of '98 and '99 met on the baseball diamond, and victory took the side of the brave; for in one day the hosts of '98 were beaten sorely, and the people could not distinguish the sound of '99's shoutings of joy from the sound of the weeping of '98; for they wept with a loud noise, and it was heard afar off.

So the end of this year drew nigh, and Commencement came, and likewise came vacation. Then the summer passed by and autumn after it, and after that the frost came and the fever took a chase. And when the eleventh month was come, the Class of '99 reassembled at the University, being at this time Juniors, and the other classes came with them. Now ye will remember that this is a short year, on account of the late opening. The football was not known this year at the 'Varsity. Winter has passed with a wheezing breath, and behold, spring is at hand, as comely and as fair to look upon as a Co-ed. of '99. The days that are History's merge into the days of the present; and lo, our task is done. Look ye into the records of the University, and ye shall see unnumbered accounts and testaments of the valor and strength of '99, very many of which, nevertheless, we have not repeated here lest any be offended, thinking that we boast.

And finally, hearken ye who love accounts of war, whose souls delight in strife and carnage. Hear the story of this, the latest deed of '99, which we here record. It came to pass that the tribe of '98 slowly recovered after the ball game that was played in the year of '97, and they lifted up their heads and became exceeding brave as their wounds were healed, so that when this present springtime came, they said among themselves: "Surely, it was an accident; behold, we will fight them again." And the heralds arose and came from their council unto the boundaries of '99, and threw the spear dipped in blood, and said unto them: "We beseech ye, come out, if ye still play baseball, and contend with us, for behold, we would do you." So the warriors of '99 went out and fought against the warriors of '98, and slew them all, so that when they awoke in the morning they were found dead. This was done on Saturday before Easter, and the next day it rained.

Sophomore Class History

THE class of 1900 has but little history to record. The efforts of its members have been directed largely along oratorical lines, and Sophomores have been much in evidence in the various contests this session.

For the data relating to the individual members of the class, the readers are referred to the class statistics in the following pages of this volume, and their most noteworthy history will be found inscribed in after days upon the pages of the Nation's annals.

Freshman Class History

PEOPLE say that to write a history of the world, a history of a State, or of any great thing, you must do more than write names, chronicle dates, and narrate events; that it is necessary that you sum up everything, tell the effects of these things on the progress of the world. So, "Write the History of the Class of 1901," they say to an humble scribbler; they allow him one page of "OLE Miss," in which to tell all the wonderful facts concerning our class: just as if half the number of good qualities which it possesses, as if half of the stars of glory that lie glittering in its path, as if the steps by which it mounts to the pinnacle of fame, as if all these could be written of in a page or in a hundred pages.

So, he must be content with admonishing you (the world) to watch this band as it stalks to glory. "He that hath ears to hear, let him hear. Selah!"

The ninth month, then the tenth came and passed, and left behind their tracks of red and gold; the November moon lent its silver to the red and to the gold.

Then the fever's hand was stayed, and the half-a-hundred eager Freshmen crowded into the doors of the University.

The poor upper-classmen, when they saw the brilliant path that lay before the Class of 1901, like "women, with hysteria, whose servants have left them during the season of house-cleaning," tore their hair, and said, "Verily, these men are too much for us."

Five days passed. They found themselves in the chapel forging the first link that went to make the chain of the history of the class.

Other meetings we have had since then, officers have been elected, colors chosen, various clubs organized; thus each day we forge a link and the chain lengthens.

We have not had an opportunity to gain our share of honors: "Still is virtue ever its own reward, because, forsooth, it getteth no other"; nevertheless we look forward to our glorious future when the moon of the Class of 1901 shall have eclipsed the smaller satellites of the other classes.

When 1901 is come and passed, when the bonds of our class are broken, who doubts but that we go forth from these halls, with lasting love for our Alma Mater and staunch faith in the glorious destiny of the class.

History of Law Class of '98

"Ignorantia legis neminem excusat."

F the truth of this maxim of the law the Class of '98 can give evidence; evidence, too, which is not hearsay, neither is it presumptive; cross-examination has too often proven its relevancy and competency, has established it as conclusive and strictly in personam.

Only seventeen youths we were when Law of '98 first began to breathe the fumes of legal lore; on September 12, 1896, we first tackled Blackstone and began to make a history marvelous as 'tis promising. Chroniclers of ages to come will narrate the individual deeds of our heroes; the present historian will say merely that we've surpassed all previous records of the Law School. Grades of 100 are common. With '98 "omnia præsumentur rite esse acta"; '98 doesn't claim to know it all, yet it was necessary when they became Seniors to double the number of instructors in the Law Faculty, in order that they might be taught. It remained for them to give new life and vigorous impetus to Blackstone Club; to lend increased enthusiasm to college sports and labors, and one of the largest firms of law book publishers in America, recognizing the ability of this Class of '98, in their Junior year offered as a prize to the one who might win it a set of books famous and essential, "The American and English Encyclopedia of Law." '98 was the first class in a life of five decades to effect a bona fide organization, an example which '99 soon followed, and a precedent among many other wise ones, which succeeding classes, noting the doctrine of stare decisis, must regard.

The Class of '97, noted for its excellency and copiousness in writing petitions, left '98 this heritage, which they have jealously guarded and increased.

The "Lits." of '98 once challenged the aforesaid law class to play baseball, and insisted until it became a nuisance. 'Twas abated, however, and law was satisfied; its end was attained, though we say naught of the means. The burden of proof is on the "Lits."

In the beginning of the current session the Law Graduating Class for the year was increased to thirty, among the number being minds of various degrees of dullness, some of them prima facie wise. We have preachers and orators, we have doctors, professors, and lawyers galore, and when comes the fifteenth of June and thirty more LL.B.'s are turned loose on the South, their parting injunction from the professors will be, "Well done, thou good and faithful servants"; and in time to come, when other youths read of Mississippians in Congress, they will go to the stone before the Lyceum and see written there in Law of '98 the selfsame names which made their country great.

HISTORIAN.

Junior Law Class History

THE Junior Law Class, exclusive of those taking the double course, is composed of one more than a score of members, fully one-third of whom are graduates of this or of some other institution. More than one-fourth of them have taught school, and all are of such an age and deportment as bespeak a reasonable familiarity with the ways of the world. In the words of an old saw, some are wise, some otherwise; but it is matter for congratulation that for each and every member of the class, upon condition of his exercising proper diligence, there is a fair prospect of success and happiness in his chosen profession.

As the Blackstone and Class Moot Courts have been this year combined, owing to the shortness of the session, no Juniors have as yet appeared as attorneys in any of the cases assigned for trial, only Seniors being allowed to practice in the class courts. They have, however, done faithful service as jurymen and chaplains, and they are awaiting their day in court next session with more or less impatience.

In the contest for anniversarian of the Blackstone Society, participated in by three Juniors, Mr. J. E. Holmes was awarded the honor, while many nice compliments were passed upon the efforts of all the young orators who represented the class upon the occasion of its first public appearance. He who reads will see elsewhere in the pages of "OLE MISS," interesting statistics concerning the individual members of the class; so, this simple record need not be further extended.

That the future history of each and every one of this little band of coming attorneys may record deeds worthy of grateful remembrance on the part of the Nation and characteristic of the followers of lofty ideals, is the earnest hope of every truly interested friend.

JUNIOR LAW CLASS

“Corinna at the Bath.”

[ AFTER OVID. ]

Tiptoe upon the marble steps she stands,
Her raven hair in many a ringlet falling ;
Behind her stately head clasping her hands
As some fair ocean nymph that o'er the sands
Paces at eve, to some wild spirit calling.
Another step, and then her rosy feet
Have touched the edges of the scented stream ;
With eager haste the perfumed waters greet
Her coming, as the goddess of their dream.
Deeper she goes, and now the wave recoils
And back in quivering tiny ripples flees,
Intoxicate with beauty ; now it boils
With passion as it clasps her shapely knees ;
And now into its passionate embrace
The maiden yields, and in its liquid arms
Sinks, the embodiment of Roman grace,
The fair Corinna with her myriad charms.

O if it be a melancholy truth
That in no future life my soul shall live ;
That in no spirit land eternal youth
The blest elixir of the gods can give ;
O if it be when my short life is spent,
The decree of nature that I love no more,
But on this narrow world's space-bounded shore
Return to some primeval element,
Then let the cooling river be my path,
That I may chance to fill Corinna's bath.

A Sonnet

The past ! ah why does joy so thrill the soul,
To think of by-gone days ? 'Tis there repose
The hopes, the dreams, of what was once ; a rose
That blooms in memory's field, a sweetened whole.
To-day, each youthful hope, once loved so well,
That soared the luring skies, but blighted fell ;
Each boyish dream and fancy, robed so gay
In airy nothingness, has passed away ;
And now we find that these, like all delights,
Were never known 'till gone, as fitting lights.

But, O memory, thou, too, hath a bitter sting !
Some hideousness is couched beneath thy bowers ;
And from thy echoing bell doth sometimes ring
A strain which saddens all thy scented flowers.

Triolets

I.

The rose or her lip—
    Say which is the redder!
Which sweeter to sip,
The rose or her lip?
With the honey they strip
    Surely wild bees have fed her!
The rose or her lip—
    Say which is the redder!

III.

Young Cupid, the traitor,
    Has cloven my heart.
Each wise woman-hater
Young Cupid, the traitor,
Will sooner or later
    Trausfix with his dart.
Young Cupid, the traitor,
    Has cloven my heart!

II.

Blue eyes that forbid,
    Red lips that consent!
Why, the lashes have hid
Blue eyes that forbid!
And I—well, I did—
    I think, what you meant,
Blue eyes that forbid,
    Red lips that consent!

IV.

Her bosom touched mine,
    As we moved in the dance,
With a languor divine.
Her bosom touched mine
With the fire of old wine
    Of the vintage of France!
Her bosom touched mine,
    As we moved in the dance.

In Football Times

THE girl with the orange and blue ribbons streaming from her gayly decorated cart smiled triumphantly at the demure figure sitting in the trap opposite. The red and blue streamers fluttered around the quiet little form in an awed and subdued sort of fashion, for the Louisiana State University team had fulfilled the expectations of its supporters by scoring against the Mississippi eleven in the first half of the great Vicksburg game. The big fellow who sat by the side of the dainty Mississippi enthusiast looked solemnly and thoughtfully across the white-barred gridiron formed in a wide, irregular band, formed of grandstand, bleachers, boxes, tally-ho's, and a three-deep line of eager humanity against the ropes, to where a crowd of Louisiana "rooters" were shouting all sorts of incomprehensible things to the accompaniment of a number of foghorns, which made the tantalizing "rah, rah" of the jolly Baton Rouge men more irritating than ever to his ardent Mississippi soul. A pair of the truest, bluest eyes in the world looked bravely up into his clouded face, and a low voice whispered: "Never mind, Teddie, just wait until our half-back tries some of his bucks in the next half. We will beat them yet."

The big fellow smiled, and whispered something in her ear that made her cheeks grow red and her eyes shine like two jolly, happy stars. But at the same time he realized that Mississippi's chances of winning were very small, and he remembered a roll of greenbacks in an envelope at the Carroll House that he wished was safely back in his almost empty pocket.

When the umpire blew his whistle for the end of the first half, the wearers of the orange and blue took one long breath, and then broke forth in such a pandemonium of joy as only a football crowd can make, for the score stood six to nothing for Louisiana. The girl in the cart still smiled condescendingly at the girl by his side, and he could see that the Louisiana man who accompanied her was grinning at them both in quite a patronizing manner. He bit his lip angrily.

He had just determined to brace up, and was telling the owner of the wide-open blue eyes that "perhaps our boys will pull us out of the hole," when the "beastly Louisiana crowd" on the other side of the field sent their yell racketing through space. He glanced up quickly, and looking down that way saw one of the Louisiana half-backs speed down towards the Mississippi goal, turning over three ambitious youngsters, with red and blue jerseys on, as he ran, and place the ball behind Mississippi's goal posts for Louisiana's second touchdown. And then the whole scene, with its fluttering orange and blue flags, and all its shouting Louisiana men, grew hateful to him, and he wanted to go over to where those tin horns were and knock somebody down with something heavy. He actually hated the pretty Louisiana girl in the cart opposite, who waved an orange and blue flag towards him and laughed—yes, really laughed at him and his companion! He remembered that roll at the Carroll and frowned, but a soft little hand caught his own as it lay amid the folds of his overcoat, and gave it a quick, warm pressure, while a pair of dear lips murmured, "That's all right, Teddie, our fellows will win the game for us yet."

The ball was in the possession of the Louisiana men, and they had done such good service that the ball was once more far into the Mississippi territory. But the wearers of the blue and red made their last stand. Vainly the opposing line hurled itself against them. Neither through the center nor round the end could they go. "Third down," said the umpire, and from the supporters of the red and blue there came a mighty and increasing howl of joy, as the ball went to Mississippi.

But the Louisiana goal is very, very far away, and those fellows in orange and blue are terribly strong and quick.

The ball is given to the heavy half-back. The forwards endeavor to make a hole for him. One down, no gain. The ball is given to the other half for a try around the end, but one of the Louisiana men breaks through and tackles him behind the line. Two downs, no gain.

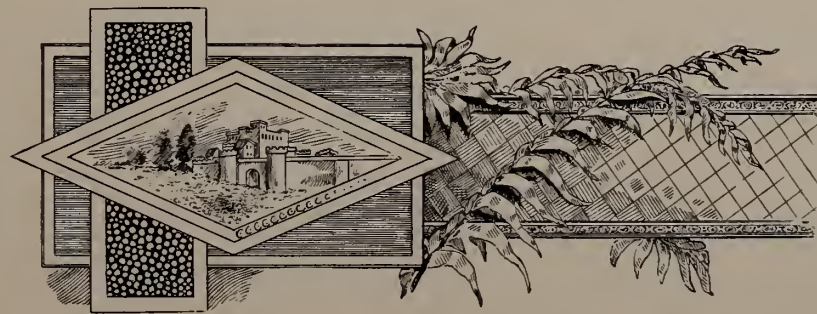

Then from the ranks of the faithful supporters of the red and blue there goes a despairing groan. It looks as if they never will make it. The signal is given again in a loud, clear voice, and the ball passed to the low, stockily-built half. The interference is formed splendidly, and down the field the half-back goes followed by his out-distanced pursuers, while the frantic crowd, breaking through the ropes, scarcely give him time to make his touch-down before they surround him. And how the "rooters" strained their voices to the highest pitch of endurance!

Back to the middle of the field the ball goes, and in a few minutes it is again in the possession of Mississippi; and then the fellow in the trap smiled and took heart. Anxiously he watched the Mississippi men throw themselves against the Louisiana line, and to his delight he saw that line giving away inch by inch. The ball was slowly but steadily creeping down the field towards Louisiana's goal. The thirty-yard line is passed, the twenty-five, the twenty. Will they be able to score another touchdown, and thus tie the score? His brown eyes smiled down into the happy face by his side with something of hope in them, but he saw the Louisiana man in the opposite cart look at his watch and nod reassuringly to the girl at his side, and, looking at his own watch, he realized that, play as they would, Mississippi would not have time to make another touch-down before time was called. And yet he hoped against hope. The little hand that again pressed his own was not withdrawn this time. It was too dark now for anyone to see, and somehow it comforted him to know that she was near and understood. The dear little form bent closer and closer to him—perhaps because it was colder, and perhaps because—well, who knew, any way? He needed sympathy, and it comforted him to have her near—so very near.

And somehow he did not feel half as bad as he had thought he would when the horrid horns announced that Louisiana had won. Through the dusk he thought he saw the triumphant smile of the pretty Louisiana girl as she and her escort were driven rapidly away from the scene of their late victory; but a dear, loving hand pressed his own, and a dear little form nestled nearer and nearer to him, while a dear, sweet voice—the one that had sustained him through all his recent disappointment—said with a brave little ring to it: “Never mind, Teddie, you’ve won me lately, and that’s something, isn’t it?”

And I, for one, agree with what Teddie told her—his lips almost touching her fair, soft cheek—“that winning a brave little friend like her was worth all the football games that were ever lost or won.”

Desolation

In the midmost might of the summer,
In the warm high tide of the year,
As gay as minstrel or mummer,
The glory of blooms may appear ;

And the blush of the day may be fairer
Than the gardens in God's paradise,
And the song of the birds may be rarer
Than the cherubim songs in the skies ;

And the lips of the wind with its kisses
May thrill like the taste of the wine,
And the earth may offer its blisses
With the smile of the sunlight a-shine ;

But never for me will they render
A tingle of pleasure again,
And never my heart beat tender
At the lisp of the summertime rain ;

For the darkness of death is made splendid
By your face, as the dark of the night
By the moon, with the stars attended,
And beauty from earth has ta'en flight.

Statistics

IN making up the following statistics, the committee encountered a great many difficulties. Not only was it impossible to reach all the men in college, but a great many refused to fill up the question blanks, while many others handed in replies which, in their endeavor to make facetious, they had rendered utterly worthless. Then, again, quite a number of the blanks, when returned to the committee, contained answers to only a few of the questions. These causes combined served to diminish the number of replies, and in proportion to lessen the value of the statistics. The committee believe, however, the following to be a reasonably accurate average of the views and personal characteristics of the student body, and accordingly present them to the public.

Duly impressed with the weight and importance which the world at large attaches to dress, one of the first questions asked was, "Who is the biggest dude in college?" To a query of this nature, the vote was necessarily scattered, but as replies came in thicker and thicker, one name began to loom into prominence. When the final count was made, Mr. G. P. Bondurant received a distinct majority, and is, therefore, entitled to all the honor and distinction appertaining to his exalted position.

Mr. C. T. Beckett, of West Point, is adjudged by the majority to be the best-looking man in college. As in the preceding contest, there were many competitors for this honor, though in the end the battle narrowed down to two. It was long doubtful whether Mr. Beckett would carry off the palm, Mr. J. E. Holmes making a fine sprint for the goal. Mr. Holmes received second place.

Another important question was as to who was the most popular man at the University. Here Mr. S. M. Jones led from the start, and won by a handsome majority. Miss Ella Clingan, of Jackson, was declared the most popular "co-ed."

The next to be entitled to a seat in our "Temple of Fame" is Mr. R. E. Wilbourn, of Scooba, who is pronounced by the popular verdict to be the most intellectual person in the student body. It is no mean honor to be held the most intellectual of the bright minds assembled here, and we tender Mr. Wilbourn our congratulations and assurances of respect. Mr. G. G. Lyell, of Wesson, came in second.

The result of the balloting for the greatest sleeper was that Dr. C. C. Ferrell was thought to be entitled to this honor, and he won by a handsome majority.

Mr. Lee McGehee Porter, of Jackson, completely outdistanced all competitors in the race for the greatest lady-killer, and won in a walk over all others.

Mr. W. Lane Austin was distinguished as the best writer, Mr. W. H. Hamner as the best orator, Mr. L. P. Leavell as the best declaimer, and Mr. G. G. Lyell as the best debater.

Mr. A. W. Shands was declared the most egotistical man in the University. It must be said, however, that Mr. Shands had numerous close rivals for this honor, and it was not without a struggle that he won. His closest opponent was Mr. L. M. Kahn.

The count showed that Mr. H. D. Priestley, of Canton, was considered the best musician in college.

Mr. J. R. McDowell, of Holly Springs, had a large majority of the votes for the funniest man.

The race for the most graceful dancer was a close one. There were many competitors, but the race finally narrowed down to two—Mr. H. D. Priestley and Mr. J. F. Pope—and the result was that each of these gentlemen received the same number of votes. As there seemed to be no way of settling this tie, we had to let it stand. The race for the biggest flirt also resulted in a tie between Mr. A. G. Roane and Mr. J. H. Thompson. Mr. Lex Brame and Mr. C. A. Dougherty ran neck and neck for the honor of being the biggest crank in the University. Mr. Brame managed to beat Mr. Dougherty by the close margin of one vote.

The decision as to the laziest man seemed to be reached without much trouble, as Mr. M. L. Perkins was practically without opposition. Mr. Webb Williams also seemed to have a number of his friends who regarded him as the freshest man in the University, so that honor was duly awarded him.

But the man who most completely outdistanced all his competitors was Mr. W. P. Kretschmar, in the race for the most bow-legged man. There were other contestants besides Mr. Kretschmar, but this gentleman won, receiving something like four-fifths of all the votes cast.

Various and novel were the opinions regarding the greatest need of the University. The conclusion reached by the majority was that money was the need most felt.

With praiseworthy devotion, six-sevenths of the voters had remained true to the girls they left behind them. The other one-seventh, however, freely confess that they have been unable to withstand the charms of our fair sirens, and have transferred their allegiance to some University damsel. Sixteen-seventeenths of the voters admitted that they flirted.

While this question was not asked on the voting blanks, yet we feel that we can safely say that ninety-eight per cent of the students have spent during the year all the money they could scrape up.

This closes the statistics, and if they prove of interest to the reader, the committee will feel amply repaid for the time and trouble spent in collecting them.

STATISTICS COMMITTEE.

September

The vagrant western breezes blow,
And dally with the whispering corn,
The meadows gleam in gold and red,
The clover nods its plumed head,
And floating clouds as white as snow,
Eternal seas of blue adorn.

O love of mine, this summer weather
Mocks me now for summers dead !
No fleecy clouds and azure skies
Are lovely as thy sunny eyes ;
No goldenrod on field and heather
Makes summer when our joys have fled.

O royal June, could ever reign,
With endless years beneath his sway,
Could he unite this waiting heart
To thine, O Love, no more to part,
Our summers then would never wane,
And life be one long holiday !

But June is dead. His lavish hand
Is cold as Winter's icy breath ;
And none remember now to say
That June was royal in his day.
And e'en the flowers that deck the land
Shall withered lie eftsoons in death.

But winter can not chill the love
That lives within that heart of thine,
Nor dim thy bonnie eyes of blue,
Nor make this loyal heart less true,
Till warm and balmy skies above
Announce again sweet summertime.

U. M. VS. TULANE

Score, 14 to 6

Well, we are ahead of Tulane once again. Twice has she dragged the Crimson and Blue in the dust on the football field, and as many times have we done the same to the Olive and Blue. But what did you say the score was, "Kretch," in that baseball game—14 to 6?

The Tulane men were first seen upon the field in their gray uniforms, then quickly followed the 'Varsity in their blue and red suits. They went upon the diamond amid shouts and rah! rah! rah's! of the three or four hundred people who were there to cheer them on to victory.

The game opened with Mississippi at the bat. Hardy, Jones, and Myers, the first three men up, went out nicely on infield hits. We found Anderson not to be such a hard nut to crack after all, and were only waiting an opportunity to show him how Mississippi men go after a pitcher. Tulane then came to the bat, and, to their sorrow, found "Big Johnson" more than a consequence; and quite frequently—I believe ten times—they went out to the tune of one, two, three. At the end of the fifth inning the score stood 5 to 2 in favor of Tulane; then in the sixth Mississippi won the game, for Captain "Toby" Jones cried out, "We want to score this time, fellows." And Mississippi did score, for at the end of the sixth the score stood 9 to 5 for the 'Varsity.

Our chant, "We won't sit down until we make a run, hey!" seemed to rattle Tulane completely, and from that point the game was never in doubt.

Special mention should be made of every man on the 'Varsity team if space would allow it, but our battery, Jones and Johnson, deserve special notice. Seldom has prettier work been seen on a college diamond than was shown by these two last Friday, Johnson striking out ten men in all, showing good head work throughout the game; and to try to go to second meant sure death from the arm of Jones.

Tulane left the field with hopes crushed, but with the thought, "Well, we will even up with you to-morrow"; but to-morrow never came for Tulane, for the game resulted in a second victory for Mississippi. Score, 7 to 3.

Densest darkness hung about ;
Within, a bright fire's warmth and cheer
Defied the gloom ; a table near ;
A shaded lamp cast softened rays,
A student sat with intent gaze
Fixed on a page he strove to read,
Nor to the wind or storm gave heed.

He strove to read — he strove in vain —
And not one thought could he retain.
Time and again the lines retraced,
Some words left out, others replaced.
The letters danced and seemed to change,
And then — a transformation strange —
The letters gone, and in their place,
The student gazed upon a face.

A brow of purity so white,
Cheeks faint-tinged with new-dawn's light,
Lips, stray petals of a crimson rose,
Meeting in curves of Cupid's bows.
Eyes of beauty, sapphire blue,
That found in the skies a kindred hue.
Golden sunbeams formed the hair
That framed this face divinely fair.

He dreamed, and gazed, and smiled, and dreamed,
And the winsome face to him, it seemed,
Smiled back again. The lamp burned low,
The embers cast a faint red glow,
The storm and wind ceased their fight,
The darkness fled, the moon shone bright;
The student gazed, dreamed on and on,
The book slipped, fell — the face was gone !

That was All

An invitation — that was all !
The moon looked down with wrinkled brow
Upon the dreary, somber pall
Of withered leaves that covered now
The campus all.

The north-wind shrieked and hastened by,
Shriveling up each tender flower,
With icy touch and blasting sigh —
Alas! one spot had brooked his power,
With piteous cry.

The wizard owl with voice atune
Screamed loudly from his haunted tree,
Where ghosts were wont, and now were soon
To dance and sing in gaiety,
O'er misfortune.

But all the ghouls that filled the air,
And all the phantom winds that blew,
Were naught but failures to compare
In grief to one sad Junior who
Was sorrowing there.

He thought he heard the happy ring
Of wedding-bells afar away ;
But to his ears they seemed to sing
Naught but mourning — sad display
Of suffering.

What dreadful fate could e'er befall
So fair a youth to strike him down ?
He'd just received his sweetheart's call —
Her wedding in his native town —
That was all !

He Did Not Reform

THE morning sun shone brightly upon a green hill on the western shore of Chesapeake Bay, where a large farm house sat upon the summit, surrounded by a flourishing fruit farm. It was about the middle of the berry season. In a small grove of spruce pines near the beach stood a whitewashed cottage in the tall grass, surrounded by no ordinary evidences of habitation, and a lean old man who sat in the shade near its door had not the appearance of a man who lived at home. His battered hat lay upon the ground beside him, and he ran his big hands at times through his thin, gray hair in a troubled manner. "Bill," he said to himself, "ye are back at Mr. Ellison's again, and have been well received. Stowed here in this bit of a cottage, away from the crowd of pickers, where ye can rest. Seven years ago ye spent yer summer in this pretty grove, and by the Howly Turk, ye have seen rough sailing since them days. Let's see; two years aboard the Mount Stuart to the Indies and back to San Frisco, and on around the Horn to New York. Two months in Brooklyn, then in the Ram to Cape Colony, and two years in the army there. Two years of fishing and dredging, four months in Johns-Hopkins with the Rheumatiz, a winter aboard the banana boats, two months on the bum, and here we blow again with the farmer, not a cent in the wallet. Ye are a failure, Bill; the drink and the sea have done for ye. Think of yer father, a Bishop in the old Church.

Look at yer brothers, a curate one, the other Mayor of Kildare. Ye could have graduated at Oxford, but no, ye must be a bum. Yer life may not be as long ahead as yonder schooner's jib boom, and who'll bury yer then? who'll pay the priest?"

The old man's wrinkled face was infinitely sad, as he thus communed with himself, and when he ceased to speak he sat for a long time looking pensively across the waters of the bay to the eastern shore, where the white cliffs and buildings gleamed indistinctly in the sun.

On the second day after the arrival of the Irishman at the farm, Mr. Ellison brought to the cottage two people, a man and a woman, and installed them, with apologies to O'Connor, the Irishman, in the second floor of the cottage. The old man paid his respects to the new comers in a courteous manner that was surprising in one of his unengaging appearance, but when they were in their own room and he was left alone again, he shook his head in a perplexed manner, and went about cooking his supper, carrying on a disjointed conversation with himself. As he sat down to eat, he said: "Bower, is it? Well, Mister Bower, it bates me entoiely, the way ye favor Tim Smith, him that left his belt knife sticking in the heart of poor John Sims at San Frisco."

Fruit harvesting in Maryland gives a few summer months of employment to hundreds of people from the cities of that region. For the most part they are of a very low grade of society, and the farmers treat them much as they would so many tramps or gypsies. They furnish them with rude, comfortless shanties for lodges, where they must do their cooking out on the ground and sleep in bunks constructed in ship-fashion. The poor creatures seem to enjoy this mean respite from the restraints of city life, and it is really pitiful to see them singing at their work, putting flowers in their hat-bands, and in other ways giving expression to the joy that everywhere accompanies out-door life and freedom.

The next day after their arrival, Bower and his wife went out to work in the strawberry patches. O'Connor accompanied his house-mates, laughing and talking with the little woman, or rather girl, she seemed, but casting occasional keen glances at her husband.

"A pretty bit of a gurl that, be me faith," he said to himself while at work, "and from Belfast, too. Sure, and it takes old Erin to make a rare woman. She's every bit of a lady, and not used to work like this, but she's struck rough weather here. Run away from home with that chap. Poor little gurl! And the gentleman with her! Why, Bill, but ain't it just like being in ould San Frisco again to see that chap? Are the eyes of ye so far gone as not to recognize an ould acquaintance?"

He was unusually thoughtful and quiet toward midday, and when the dinner hour came he went to his cottage, and after eating a hurried dinner, sat down and wrote a letter, which he delivered to the farmer to be mailed on the Baltimore boat.

"Kape mum, Bill," he murmured; "let us hear from the Cap'n. Let Mister Bower be aisy, that's the trick, be aisy till we hear from the Cap'n."

Several days passed at Ellison's Fruit Farm; the pickers lived on gaily at the camp; O'Connor grew very social with his "lodgers," as he called the couple on the second floor of the cottage. But one morning the little woman did not go out to work. "Not well," her husband said, when asked about her. On the following day he reported that she was down with a fever. On the morning of the fifth day of Mrs. Bowers illness her husband did not come down stairs, and when O'Connor called out for him no answer came. "The gentleman slapes bloomin' well," said O'Connor, his heart sinking within him; "he slapes well, indade. I think the Cap'n's letter ort to come in to-day's mail. If Mr. Bower will stay till that comes, its loikely he will go to Baltimore with bracelets on the wrists of him. The dirty villian! To murder a foine chap loike John Sims!"

When he saw all the pickers going out to work he thought it high time to find out why Bower did not come down. Going softly up the stairs, he knocked at the door, and receiving no answer, opened it and looked in. The Irish girl was alone in the room. She lay asleep upon the bed, her innocent young face turned toward the rising sun.

"Overboard," said William O'Connor to himself. A folded paper on a chair beside the bed caught his eye. Without waking the sleeper the old man picked up the note and read it. It ran:

"NORA—When you get well go home to your people. Do not expect to see me again. Good-bye. BEN."

"The brute! The murderous villian!" the Irishman broke forth.

"What's that, Ben, dear?" asked Mrs. Bower, waking. Too excited to think, O'Connor thrust the note into her hand.

"Where is Ben?" she asked; then, as her eyes fell upon the first words of the note, she was seized with a violent fit of trembling, and her pale face blanched still whiter. "Read it," she said, faintly. O'Connor read every word. The sad lines of her face hardened as she lay with her gaze fixed upon the wall. "He says go home—home—without him—no money to go—O Ben! Ben!"

The old man left the room. Seizing his berry tray he strode hurriedly out of the house to the fields and went to work without speaking to any of the pickers.

Picking was good; all hands were busy while it paid. There is always enough time for idle talk and slow work when the fruit is scarce and little to be made by diligence. O'Connor did not seem to be in a hurry with his work, and the busy thoughts that teemed in his brain could have been surmised by any one who listened to the passionate mutterings which escaped his lips at frequent intervals. About ten o'clock he returned to the cottage, carrying a few choice berries, and ascending the narrow stairs that led to Mrs. Bower's room, he knocked softly at the door. "Come in," he heard her cry, excitedly. When the sick girl had seen him plainly she dropped back from the sitting posture which she had assumed and moaned bitterly. "Poor child! Poor babe!" said the old man. "Come, won't ye have a few foine strawberries?" She moaned, less audibly than before, and raising her big sorrowful eyes to his face, asked, hesitatingly: "Have ye—have ye seen—O no, of course not," and she hid her face in her hands and wept.

"Come," said O'Connor, "let's eat some fresh berries and brace up a bit." She made no answer, but took the fruit and ate a few bites slowly, evidently striving only to please the old man. After doing what little services he could for her comfort, O'Connor left her alone and returned to his work.

Raspberries were now ready for gathering. Picking went ahead as briskly as ever, and the days passed rapidly at Ellison's. Little Mrs. Bower slowly recovered from the fever that had siezed her, and within three weeks she was able to sit up and eat the rudely prepared food which O'Connor, who never forsook her, brought to her room. One evening after supper, when his charge was asleep, O'Connor sat alone before his door and communed with himself, as was his habit.

"Mister Bower set sail just two days too soon. Man! but weren't the Cap'n's men hungry for him? O well, let the baste go; I should have hated to hear the gurlie cry when they took him. But the gurlie, poor Nora! . . . I wonder how much is in the wallet now." He took a dirty leather bag from his pocket and counted the handful of coins and brass checks that it contained. "Twenty-eight dollars. Bill, ye've enough o' the nasty stuff to take ye home already, and if ye knuckle to it through the rest o' the berry season, ye can go home to yer brother in good riggin'. Ye must quit this aivil loife and be a man, ye must; ye'll have to go home and reform. . . . But the little gurl, that bates me entoiely; what shall I do with Nora? There will be about eight days more o' the pickin'. That manes foive or six dollars more. Thirty-four dollars—that won't carry the both of us."

"The old man leaned his head upon his hands and sat for a long time in deep thought. The lights had gone out up at the farm house and all noise had ceased at the pickers' quarters when O'Connor arose and went into his room. He moved restlessly upon his bed for a long time after retiring, and his last words before going to sleep came in a broken, weary voice, almost in sobs. "Ye'd better do it, Bill, mate; let the child go home to her mammy. Ye can kape a bit to get a drink or two, and what's the difference? If ye live another year, ye can get home then, and ye may live a long time yet. The gurlie must go to Belfast."

In a few more days Mrs. Bower was almost well again, and began to talk of going out to work, not knowing that the picking was so near its close. One evening she had eaten supper at her bedside and sat chatting with O'Connor. During the conversation he turned his eyes toward a high corner of the room, seemingly by accident, and espied a piece of paper sticking in a crack of the wall. "See that bit o' paper up there in the corner, did ye chuck it there, lass?" he said, and without waiting for a reply he reached up on tiptoe and seized it. It was an envelope addressed to Benj. Bower, General Delivery, Baltimore, Md. "It's addressed to the gintleman that's left," said O'Connor, in a tremulous voice, handing her the package. Nora looked into the torn end and gave a nervous little shriek, then recovering herself, she ran her fingers into it and drew out a small roll of paper money. Both rose excitedly to their feet. "Thirty dollars!" exclaimed Nora. "It's Ben's money; he left it for me. Now I can go home. Ben was a good man. O Ben! Ben!"

The old wanderer paced the floor excitedly. At length the woman raised her eyes to him and said: "May God bless ye, Mr. O'Connor. Ye've saved the life of me when I was sick, and now I can go home again. Ben could not lave me all alone and helpless. The Lord bless ye and him."

"Aye, Nora, my gurlie," O'Connor answered.

The next afternoon the schooner leaving Ellison's for Baltimore bore two passengers, a tall old man and a pale little woman, who sat together on the deck and talked merrily in Irish accent until the vessel reached the city and was moored at the marsh market dock. Leaving the schooner, they walked slowly along the market in the direction of Baltimore Street and disappeared in the throng.

On the following morning there was a great stir and confusion at one of the deep water docks, where a passenger boat was setting out for Liverpool. William O'Connor, a shabbily-dressed Irish vagrant-sailor, stood upon the dock with his hat in his hand, and bowed and shouted to a woman upon the lower deck of the steamer, who could not hear one word that he said for the uproar. When the vessel had moved down the dock with a mighty clanging of bells, whistling of engines, and swish and roar of water at the stern, and the woman upon the lower deck could no longer be seen, O'Connor replaced his ragged hat upon his head and walked aimlessly back towards the city.

"What's the game now, mate?" he asked himself. "Nothing in the bag but the price of a drink or two. Ye thought ye would go home to the Green Isle and be a man, but ye could not lave the little gurl. Now for another year at sea, and its loikely ye won't live through it. But have a drink, mate, have a drink or two." And he did take a drink, several of them before the day was gone, and spent the night upon the streets in a drunken carousal. Late in the night, on looking up from a seat upon a curb stone, his eye was caught by the figure of a man among the crowd that passed across the light which streamed from a saloon door. The old man sprang up hastily. "Bower! Smith! Tim Smith!" he called, and started in pursuit. But he staggered helplessly to the ground and crawled back to his place by the gutter. "Mister Bower, indade," he muttered; "I'll write to the Cap'n, faith, that I will."

Life Scholarship, $30.00

Don't think because the terms are low it is cheap work. It is thorough and on a parity with these hard times. Ours is one of the progressive, growing, and most popular institutions of the South.

"A business education is a necessity, and one who enters upon the duties of life without the guiding influences has all the chances of success against him. We know of no better place for young men and young ladies to go for such training than to that wonderfully progressive institution, Harris' Practical Business College, Jackson, Miss. It is doing more for the worthy, struggling boys and girls than any other Business College. Nineteen of its students recently secured positions within three weeks."—Jackson Evening News.
